Intro (digression on a psycho acoustic chord)

My uncle's an astronomer.

*I've always thought it was fabulous having an astrologer uncle,
being an astrologer*

I remember the time when he told me a lot of what he did was just sitting at his computer observing black dwarfs, which are stars – or planets, I'm not sure – that you can't see.

– «But what do you look at, then?» I asked him.

– «I look at curves. And when they bend out of shape it's a sign that there are masses present, which means heavenly bodies.»

Since that day I've been convinced that my uncle and his fellow astronomers are some of the most dedicated observers of abstraction there are.

1st verse (the heroine)

She's a woman, she's 35

She's an artist

She's a musician

She's a publisher too

She's Felicia Atkinson

For La Criée she's created Spoken Word

Refrain

It's an exhibition

It's a landscape you never get to

It's a sound work/desert island

you can stroll about in

It's a silent film hiding unheard-of music

It's a series of sculptures you can activate to no end

It's a game for two with no rules

It's a frieze of distorting mirrors

2nd verse (for the white room)

There are three big sculptures
You can lean on them, go under them They're rocks trees instruments cacti totems furniture
There are also ten sculptures that can fit in your hand
That two people can play with sitting at a table
You can grab the art, touch it, stroke it There's the (rocky) desert
There are maps with no memory, too, which are big digital prints on aluminium, hung on the wall
They're collages of words and simple shapes, triggers for stories, clues
You can almost see yourself in them
And then there are coloured shapes growing on the walls

Refrain

It's an exhibition
It's a landscape you never get to
It's a sound work/desert island
you can stroll about in
It's a silent film hiding unheard-of music
It's a series of sculptures you can activate to no end
It's a game for two with no rules
It's a frieze of distorting mirrors

3rd verse (for the whole space)

There's a sound track that keeps exhibition hours every day (travel time and dream time)
There's the (Sonora) desert
The sound track is sometimes electronic (a modular synthesiser) Sometimes it's the sound of the California desert
Sometimes of the wild islands of Brittany Sometimes samples from audio books It's a sound track that sings a scattered narrative with no beginning or end or middle and no plot
There's the (miraculous) desert

Refrain

It's an exhibition
It's a landscape you never get to
....

4th verse (for the black room)

There's a silent film (behind a heavy fluid molten-coloured curtain)
There are the giant cacti of the Saguaro desert They're totems sculptures humans trees instruments
There's the desert (listen to it)
Felicia is playing for the cacti Felicia makes slow movements for the cacti, sculptor's movements
There's the desert (look at it)
There's the beauty of the movements
Beauty is a decision and an inexplicable desire

Refrain

It's an exhibition
It's a landscape you never get to
....

5th verse (the Green Flashes)

Other works spring from the exhibition On May 10th Felicia is inviting the poet and artist Hanne Lippard to speak among the works
Litanies melodies
timbre range
The voice is an instrument
The invention of the verbal
On May 20th she is inviting the dancer Elise Ladoué to dance slowly amid the exhibition
She accompanies her with her sounds,
Almost a concert
And there's the book, too, that she's published with Shelter Press, her publishing house, it's called Audio Book, at the same time it's an outline of the exhibition, and of its sources and continuation

Sophie Kaplan, January 2017

Green Flashes

Echoing its exhibitions, La Criée offers throughout the year events, called Green Flashes, that explore the points of contact between contemporary art and other creative fields and knowledge, through concerts, shows, performances, readings, etc..

— Hanne Lippard

performance
Wednesday 10th March at 7 pm
(reading in english)

Lippard's practice explores the voice as a medium. Her education in graphic design informs how language can be visually powerful; her texts are visual, rhythmic, and performative rather than purely informative, and her work is conveyed through a variety of disciplines, which include short films, sound pieces, installations and performance.

Hanne Lippard, born in 1984 in Milton Keynes, GB, lives and works in Berlin.

EUROPEAN MUSEUM NIGHT
Saturday 20th May 2017
La Criée is open from 8 pm to midnight

Omega
Élise Ladoué and Felicia Atkinson
performance
from 9 pm and 11 pm

Starting from the short novel by Don DeLillo Point Omega, whose plot takes place in a museum and in a desert of West America, the dancer Élise Ladoué and Felicia Atkinson play a two-hour contemplative duo with their own language: dance, and music and sculpture.

Barely moving, a hand is stretching, a foot is arching, a ball of earth is forming between two fingers, a guitar drone is taking shape slowly.

To improvise in an extended time, to share a territory without speaking same language, to compose an unresolved "suspense", to invite public to a contemplation as to that of landscape, Both mysterious and never complete, these are materials that make Omega.

Élise Ladoué, born in 1982. Shi is a dancer and a choreographer trained at National Conservatory of Music and Dance, Paris and at Opera Dance School, Paris.

Élise Ladoué and Felicia Atkinson met each other in 2003 in Bocal project by Boris Charmatz.

Felicia Atkinson, associated artist

Every year La Criée associates artists with its projects. Working together this way means a sharper focus on art and generates a new kind of long-term partnership with the artists, a close link with the creative process.

Felicia Atkinson is one of the three associate artists (with Julien Bismuth and Yann Sérandour) for the While I was also listening [...] cycle at La Criée from January 2017 to February 2018.

Felicia Atkinson (born 1981 in Paris) graduated with Honors from l'Ecole Nationale Supérieure des Beaux-Arts de Paris and was also involved with the experimental pedagogical dance project BOCAL with Boris Charmatz in 2003. She received the Languï Prize for Painting at the Young Belgium Art Prize in 2013.

She is a visual artist, an experimental musician and the co-publisher of the independent imprint Shelter Press/curatorial platform Argument with Bartolomé Sanson.

She has exhibited her work in group shows and solo shows at Komplot (Bruxelles), Bozar (Bruxelles), MUCA ROMA (Mexico D.F), Overgaden (Copenhagen), Kunsthalle Charlottenborg (Copenhagen) Lieu Commun/ Printemps de Septembre (Toulouse), Rinomina (Paris), Land and sea (Oakland), Chert Gallery (Berlin), and Joseph Tang Gallery (Paris), among others.

As a musician and sound artist, she has performed at Palais de Tokyo in Paris, Cinema Tonala in Mexico D.F, Maison de France in Rio de Janeiro, Wiels in Bruxelles, MOCA in Los Angeles, Rewire Festival in Den Hague, and Borderline Festival in Athens, among others. She has published more than 15 records on various labels (including Shelter Press, Aguirre, Umor-rex, NNA Tapes, and Peak Oil) and a series of books with her own imprint, Shelter Press.

Her works deals mostly with the topics of improvisation, audio, fiction, instant composition, noise, landscape, abstraction and poetry.

Her paintings, drawings, sculpture, texts, installations, performances, and musical compositions are mostly abstract and are fed by multiples expeditions to many places such as Finland, Brazil, Mexico, Brittany, Arizona, California and Oregon, where she collect sounds, objects, materials and other diverse materials to her visual and sound works.

She currently lives in Rennes, France

A Readymade Ceremony

Fans of Felicia Atkinson's haunting and delirium-induced psychedelic drone may be aware that the French artist has also released a number of more 'abstract', musique concrète-related works under the alias Je Suis Le Petit Chevalier, as well as being active as a visual artist and publisher (the latter as a co-founder of Shelter Press). The more observant among them may have noticed a certain closeness between Atkinson's adventures as Le Petit Chevalier and her visual practice, not shared by music released under her own name — or, at least, that the work appearing under pseudonym somehow seemed a better fit for the world of MFAs and artist-run gallery spaces. I write "seemed", in the past tense, as the blurb for Atkinson's new release A Readymade Ceremony, released as Felicia Atkinson, heralds "the reunion of her two main projects — under her own name and Je Suis Le Petit Chevalier" and the affirmation of "the obvious link between her visual and sonic body of work".

An immediately obvious symptom of this shift is that the drone is no longer the central structuring device of the music, as it was on releases such as "Visions/Voices" and "O-RE-GON". Instead, a number of discrete elements are presented in an apparently arbitrary fashion. These elements include spoken fragments from Atkinson's recent book Improvising Sculpture As Delayed Fictions and from Surrealist writers René Char and Georges Bataille, copious amounts of grungy, clay-like noise, a very bright keyboard piano, and other less recognisable pitched sounds; techniques used in their presentation include repetition, looping, juxtaposition, jump cuts, and so on. The influence of early tape music and musique concrète is clearly discernible, yet there is also a clear formal correspondence with Atkinson's gallery installations, which normally consist of "a series of objects displayed on the floor" — a common mode of display that she knowingly and humourously describes as "made for good pictures for edgy art websites".

This idea of art as "a series of objects" spills over into other activities: the afore-mentioned book Improvising Sculpture also consists of a number of fragments arranged higgledy-piggledy both across the page and throughout the whole text, the speaking voice roaming nomadically between various persons and objects. This strand of thought, running across the breadth of Atkinson's practice, could perhaps be named 'sculpture'; it concerns the 'object-likeness' of its elements, be they musical, textual, visual, or otherwise. And yet, this doesn't seem sufficient to describe A Readymade Ceremony — indeed, shards of dronish, hallucinogenic dream still float among the debris, supplementing it and also transforming it. For the sake of rhetoric, I will name this transformative excess 'poetry'. I'd hesitate to call the two concepts of 'sculpture' and 'poetry' opposing forces. Rather, it seems to me that what is presented (what stands, to use Rie Nakajima's beautiful turn of phrase; sculpture) also at the same time differs from itself (is re-presented; poetry). "... abstraction connected to emotion connected to a wooden box with no key," intones the artist.

Let's make no bones about it: the poetry in A Readymade Ceremony is harder to discern than in previous Felicia Atkinson albums, which may disappoint some fans. But I would urge them to stick with it, and also to investigate Atkinson's work in other media; the excellent "Investigating Sculpture" would be a good place to start. The reward for such an effort is the impression of an ambitious, intelligent, and nuanced artistic practice, the products of which are not without beauty, but can also be surprising, funny, thought-provoking, and occasionally bitingly (and hilariously) satirical. A Readymade Ceremony is perhaps the most coherent statement to emerge from this practice thus far; one could go as far as to say that it sets the benchmark for things to come.

"Je parle de pierres qui ont toujours couché dehors ou qui dorment dans leur gîte et la nuit des filons. Elles n'intéressent ni l'archéologue ni l'artiste ni le diamantaire. Personne n'en fit des palais, des statues, des bijoux; ou des digues, des remparts, des tombeaux. (...) Elles sont d'avant l'homme; et l'homme, quand il est venu, ne les a pas marquées de l'empreinte de son art et de son industrie. Il ne les a pas manufacturées, les destinant à quelque usage trivial, luxueux ou historique. Elles ne perpétuent que leur propre mémoire".

toire où l'improvisation et la mise en boucle ouvrent ce que l'artiste appelle des "systèmes d'apparition"³. "Un corps qui dort", dit-elle ailleurs : "Il a l'air endormi, on ne peut pas savoir les rêves qu'il y a dedans, mais on sent que quelque chose de tapisse se passe. Il n'y a pas de mot à mettre dessus. Peut-être juste une couverture pour ne pas avoir froid"⁴. Le sommeil, le rêve, ressources prémonitoires des démarches portées non à édifier un répertoire de formes, mais à en rechercher les germes dans une substance : "On rêve avant de contempler, suggérait Gaston Bachelard. Avant d'être un spectacle conscient, tout paysage est une expérience onirique. On ne regarde avec une passion esthétique que les paysages qu'on a d'abord vus en rêve"⁵. Substance multiple, substance composite, substance du monde et du temps, continuum produisant de brefs éclairs, de brèves sédimentations, des "figures variables", propose Maurice Fréchuret dans son étude sur "le mou". Figures "non point issues d'un mode de pensée qui les projettent préconçues dans le futur, mais pétées dans et par le temps, constituées et érodées tout à la fois par lui"⁶. Figures transitaires, toujours candidates à leur dilution, toujours disposées à défier leurs composants pour les livrer à la totalité dont ils sont issus, pour les rendre disponibles (perméables) à d'autres conflagrations, elles-mêmes peuplées des sédimentations et passages antérieurs. "C'est comme un "delay" (un "différé") de ce qui a été fait", explique Félicia Atkinson. *Quel est cet écho que j'entends ? Où va-t-il ?*⁷.

Cru, cuit, bouilli, mort et vivant

Réminiscences, boucles, échos, répétitions sont parmi les fluides qui traversent cette esthétique de l'informe. L'indistinction en serait la structure, l'hybridation le signe. Indistinction, hybridation : le travail de Félicia Atkinson nous ralle à aux perceptions grandissantes depuis une quarantaine d'années d'un "changement de paradigme" évacuant l'illusoire primauté de l'humanisme occidental. L'homme n'est pas le centre de toute chose : il est une sédimentation mouvante et imprécise d'une totalité avec laquelle il interagit. La dernière documenta de Kassel mettait à l'œuvre cette perception du vivant et de la conscience comme animant la géographie de l'esprit aussi bien que la matière, les objets, la technologie⁸. C'est également cet effritement des catégories qu'explique Donna Haraway dans son Manifeste Cyborg : disparition des frontières entre l'humain et l'animal (entre culture et nature), entre l'organique et la machine, entre matérialité et spiritualité (entre "ce qui est physique et ce qui ne l'est pas", l'idéal et le matériel)⁹. Transgression des frontières générant, dit Haraway, "de puissantes fusions et de dangers événements"¹⁰. Transgressions qui, si elles se vérifient, nous soulagent dans l'informe, dans l'hétérogénéité du monde. Celui-ci ne serait plus dès lors le territoire délimité où ériger un modèle homogène, une essence unificatrice (l'horizon commun et imprenable du mythe de l'homme moderne), mais une friche à vivre en nomade.

L'habitat nomade : c'est l'image pressentielle pour l'installation de Félicia Atkinson au Prix de la Jeune Peinture belge (devenu Young Belgian Art Prize). Ce sera, sous le dôme de la coupole Bertouille, "entre le temple et l'atelier"¹¹. Il y aura du bois, de l'argile, du papier, de la soie, des images d'archives, des livres, quelques autres matériaux. Peut-être aussi une harpe...

Joy To The World

Musique, écriture, danse, arts plastiques... Il est peu de dire que la transversalité, le crossover et la diversité sont au cœur de la pratique de Félicia Atkinson. Depuis un peu plus de dix ans maintenant, cette artiste française investit tous les champs de la création, sans privilégier l'un ou l'autre médium, pour constituer un corpus d'une grande densité. S'inscrivant dans les pas des artistes du mouvement Fluxus, dans cette volonté affichée de briser les hiérarchies et bouleverser les frontières entre les disciplines, Félicia Atkinson a choisi de ne pas choisir, s'emparant de chacun des projets qu'elle développe avec la même énergie, quelle que soit la technique choisie. C'est dans la recherche et la construction que réside toute la richesse de sa démarche, le processus d'élaboration étant finalement aussi important que le résultat. Laissant une grande part à l'improvisation, elle se laisse en effet guider par ses intuitions et son ressenti, et construit ses expositions, livres ou disques à partir d'une trame de départ qui s'échafaude à mesure de l'avancée du projet. L'une des raisons de cette hétérogénéité des formes, atypique dans le paysage artistique français, réside dans la somme d'influences et de références que Félicia Atkinson parvient à assimiler et à s'approprier, sans complexe aucun. Au fil des entretiens donnés par l'artiste sont ainsi convoquées les figures de La Monte Young et Anna Karina, Antonin Artaud et Steve Paxton, Guy Debord et Will Oldham, pour n'en citer que quelques-unes. Autant de références que l'artiste a faites siennes, et qui viennent nourrir sa propre pratique artistique. De la même manière, dans l'un de ses albums récents, A Readymade Ceremony^{*}, apparaissent des extraits de textes de Georges Bataille et René Char, en écho à ses réflexions et interrogations. Ce sont ces grands écarts stylistiques pleinement assumés, voire revendiqués, qui font toute la complexité et la richesse du travail de Félicia Atkinson.

Néanmoins, si cette dernière est imprégnée des œuvres de ces figures tutélaires, elle est également influencée par des éléments qui relèvent plutôt de l'indicible, de la sensation, voire du quotidien, qu'il s'agisse de la contemplation d'un paysage, de l'observation d'un animal ou d'une phrase glanée au hasard d'une conversation. Une forme de porosité, d'ouverture au monde, qui lui permet de s'emparer de tout ce qu'elle vit, lit et écoute, et témoigne de sa grande liberté d'action et de pensée. Entre la quiétude du monde et son vacarme, entre la nature paisible et la ville foisonnante, entre le folk et la noise, Félicia Atkinson trace un sillon extrêmement personnel, où les notions de flux continu et de mouvement permanent sont omniprésentes, irrigant l'ensemble de ses créations.

Son exposition récente à Brest, intitulée Dinosaur Acts? (Une forêt se pétrifie)^{}, est emblématique de cette démarche. Derrière ce titre aussi énigmatique que poétique, qui fait notamment écho au groupe américain de slowcore Low, se déploie une réflexion sur notre rapport à la nature et à l'environnement, sur le passage du temps, tout en perpétuant ce processus de création si singulier où se mêlent les formats – l'exposition n'est que le prélude à un roman en cours d'écriture –, les supports – photographies, projection vidéo, son, aquarelle, etc. – et les influences – ici, Bruno Latour, John Cage ou Donald Winnicott. C'est par le biais d'une approche extrêmement sensible que s'incarne, comme à l'accoutumée, cette réflexion. Une approche où l'évocation, l'allusion, l'emportent sur le fait d'asséner une vérité et un discours uniques. Les différentes œuvres rassemblées se répondent en effet entre elles et jeux de lumière, filtres colorés, éléments sculpturaux, bribes sonores et textuelles s'entremêlent pour instaurer une ambiance propice à l'évasion, à un moment hors du temps, que chacun ressentira et interprétera différemment en fonction de son propre background.

Bien qu'une telle démarche puisse de prime abord déstabiliser, tant les références et les formes sont multiples, l'énergie, la sensibilité et l'enthousiasme qui émanent du travail de Félicia Atkinson balaient finalement tous les doutes pour nous entraîner dans un univers au potentiel narratif évident. Difficile alors, à l'heure de mettre des mots sur la pratique artistique de cette jeune artiste, de ne pas évoquer Robert Filliou et sa fameuse antienne, « L'art est ce qui rend la vie plus intéressante que l'art ». Si elle peut paraître quelque peu galvaudée aujourd'hui à force d'avoir été utilisée à tort et à travers, force est de constater que cette phrase résume à merveille la philosophie prônée par Félicia Atkinson, dans ce souci perpétuel de partage, de découverte et de mouvement.
